“People want answers when it comes to their health, not guesswork. The health care system is broken, with doctors seeing 30 or more patients a day. Too often they can’t devote the time needed to make sure their patients get the right care,” Falchuk said. “This climate, in part, explains the alarmingly high misdiagnosis rates we’re seeing so often in the cases we examine. At Best Doctors, we’re able to devote the time, thought and knowledge needed to make the best medical decisions, and it’s what sets us distinctly apart from the pack.”

Best Doctors addresses this fundamental shortcoming of today’s health care system by assembling members’ entire medical histories, taking the time to ask the right questions, and utilizing the best physician experts to provide people with answers. A key strength of the company is the caliber of its expert doctors, ranked by impartial peer-review as the best five percent of physicians in 45 specialties and over 400 subspecialty areas. In its work, Best Doctors finds that 20 percent of the cases it reviews initially have been misdiagnosed, while 60 percent of cases require a change in treatment. Last year alone, the company’s expert doctors tackled over 10,000 cases.

Best Doctors not only is saving lives in some instances, but importantly, is often saving resources for employers through the accuracy of its diagnostic and treatment work. Notably, Best Doctors also is earning acclaim from employers for leading the charge with integrating its cutting-edge services into employers’ other health benefit-related offerings for employees.
